TRAINING DAY 1 LEARNING

This report summarizes the recent training and induction program at YASH Technologies, which focused on professional communication, team bonding, and gratitude.

1. Program Introduction & Self-Reflection

The session began with a foundational introduction to the company's culture. This was followed by a Self-Reflection Activity centered on the "Three Is":

- Introspection: Looking inward to understand personal strengths and areas for growth.
- Improvement: Identifying actionable steps for professional development.
- Integration: Aligning personal goals with the organizational values

Dressing Sense & Accessories

- The Look: Stick to Business Formals (crisp shirts, trousers, blazers/suits, or formal Indian wear). Ensure clothes are ironed and fit well.
- Accessories: Keep it minimal and functional. Belts should match shoe color; watches should be professional; avoid loud or jingling jewelry.

Handshake Etiquettes

- The Grip: Offer a firm (but not crushing) grip.
- The Rule: Maintain eye contact and a brief smile. Avoid "dead fish" (weak) or "bone breaker" (too strong) handshakes. Keep your palm dry.

Elevator Etiquettes

- Space: Step to the back to let others in. If you are near the buttons, offer to press floor numbers for others.
- Exit: Let those at the front exit first. In a professional setting, let seniors or guests exit before you.
- Quiet Zone: Avoid loud conversations or phone calls in the confined space.

2. Posture & Gesture

- Posture: Stand tall with shoulders back. Avoid slouching when sitting in meetings, as it signals a lack of interest.
- Gestures: Use open-palm gestures to show honesty. Avoid crossing your arms (defensive) or pointing fingers (aggressive).

Salutations

- Greeting: Always greet colleagues and seniors with a clear "Good Morning" or "Good Afternoon."
- Address: Use the person’s preferred name or title (e.g., Mr./Ms. or simply their first name if the YASH culture is casual in that department).

Smell Matters

- Hygiene: Neutral is best. Use a subtle deodorant or perfume.
- Caution: Avoid overpowering scents that might cause discomfort to others in small meeting rooms or elevators.

Body Language

- Engagement: Use active nodding to show you are listening.
- Eye Contact: Maintain steady (but not staring) eye contact to build trust.
- The "Smile": A genuine smile is your most powerful tool for breaking the ice and showing approachability.

DAY2 LEARNINGS

Interactive Activities & Team Bonding

- Activity Mood Board: A creative session where teams built "Mood Boards" to represent their goals or current states. A voting process was held to select the most impactful board.

- Peer Appreciation: An activity where colleagues formally recognized each other’s contributions to foster a supportive environment.

- Attire & Grooming: A practical session on professional standards, specifically focusing on how to properly wear formal business attire.

Gratitude & Recognition

The program concluded with a series of Gratitude Activities to acknowledge the essential support teams that enable a smooth work environment:

- Facility & Security Teams: Recognition for maintaining a safe and efficient workplace.
- Canteen Team: Appreciation for the dining and refreshment services provided.
- Learning Support: Acknowledgment of the training and development facilitators.

Conclusion

The program successfully blended technical communication training with core human values like gratitude and reflection. By focusing on both "hard" skills like email writing and "soft" cultural elements like the "Three Is," participants are better prepared to integrate into the Yash
